COURSE DESCRIPTION

Ethics is one of the fastest growing elements of the modern world, in particular modern business. Companies can no longer focus purely on profit and medical advancements now require even the 'super vet' to review if procedures are in the best interest of the patient. In a world where abortion laws are coming full circle and assisted dying is debated in parliament, it has never been more important to be able to think deeply and assess all sides of an argument. Philosophy & Ethics will not only provide a solid foundation for further study and the job market but also life itself.

This course will take you from Dante's Inferno to spinning Sufi Muslims! Religion has always been a fundamental part of human development and, even in the 21st century, religion still addresses the same eternal questions about life and death, values and relationships, right and wrong.

In this course, you will consider a range of fundamental questions about the human condition: Why is there evil? Can you prove the existence of God? Why be moral? This course offers a broad and thought provoking approach to the study of religion and is accessible to students of any religious persuasion or none. It requires you to be organised, enthusiastic and prepared to tackle challenging ideas. This course will enable you to develop the skills needed to examine ethical, philosophical and religious issues both critically and analytically.
